COMMERCE BETWEEN STATES

Changes in the Carrents of Trade.

[From the Chicago Republican, Jan. 1.]

It appears that citier the railroads are cutting into the carrying trade of the lakes, the New York canals and the Hudson river; that the St. Lawrence route is rapidly gaining on the New York route; or other lake cities are fast cutting into the former large rade of Buffalo. Whichever of these propositions be true, the fact is patent that the commerce of the port of Buffalo has been decliming for some years past at a rate which will surprise all the dwellers in the great basin of the lakes. The following is a statement of the number of vessels entering and clearing at that port for a number of years:

The rise of manufactories and consequent diversification of industry in the Mississippi valley and Lake Basin, as dis tinguished from mere agricultural production and develop ecting enormous buts for the privilege of sprich her own towns and cities, then the next act in drams will be an appeal on the part of the people the general government to so regulate raircoan o prevent them from eating up the entire profit-noustry.

to the general government to so regulate railroads as to prevent them from eating up the entire profits of industry.

Already the advance notes of this appeal have been sounded a citizen of Chicago some three years since having been the first to take up the subject in a series of eisborate articles. These have lately been followed by movements in and out of Congress by Generals Butier, Schenck, Washburn, and the brother of the latter, now Minister to France; General Spinner, of the United States Treasury, and Senator Matt Carpenter, of Wisconsin. A short time since Mr. J. M. Richards, president of the Board of Irade of this city, presented a very sole review of the changes which have taken piace and are daily continuum to take piace in the trade and industry of the West, in connection with the carrying trade and the railroad monopoites winch threaten it. The propositions and principles laid down by Mr. Richards, nishough in direct opposition to the principles and propositions of the free trade and state rights democracy, are bound to prevail, because they are in strict accordance with the social, commercial and pointical progress of the country, it is patient to the most superioral observer that, as Mr. Spinner says, the creature cannot be greater than the creator—that corporations deriving their powers from the government must, in some shape of other, be controlled by that government when they attain proportions that threaten not only the rights and theories of the people, but the very existence of the government itself.

There are no questions which will receive such an emphatic endorsement from the great mass of the people as those embouted in the two propositions—that the government alone should regulate the commerce between the states, and alone create the means for exchanging the merchandisc of that commerce in the shape of a circulating medium which shape propositions—can proposition of trade.
